5. Lowder Hall, Horton-Hardgrave Hall

Lowder Hall is home to the Raymond J. Harbert College of Business, which also includes a Starbucks conveniently located inside the building. Next to Lowder Hall is Horton-Hardgrave Hall which houses the graduate program for students in the College of Business, and includes a rooftop terrace on the top floor.

6. Samuel Ginn College of Engineering Sector

Beside Lowder Hall is the Shelby Center for Engineering Technology which houses several auditorium and class lecture rooms, study spaces and administrative offices for the College of Engineering. Directly off Thach Concourse is the Brown-Kopel Engineering Student Achievement Center which includes laboratories, group study rooms, flexible classrooms, computer labs, project incubators and a design studio.

7. Foy Hall and Cater Hall

Foy Hall, named for a beloved former dean of men, James E. Foy, contains several food dining options, including Chicken Salad Chick, Panda Express, Prevail Coffee and its own Foy Commons Dining Hall. In addition, just outside of Foy Hall, students may select to eat from a variety of food trucks. Freshman Year Experience, Study Abroad and International Education all have their offices in Foy. Opposite Foy Hall is Katharine Cooper Cater Hall. The university's Honors College is housed here. Hey Day, a favorite Auburn tradition held annually on Cater Lawn, is held by the SGA and is dedicated to promoting the friendly campus atmosphere Auburn is famously known for.

8. Samford Hall

Samford Hall is the postcard picture of Auburn's campus. Named after former Alabama Governor William J. Samford, the building is the successor to Old Main, which burned down in 1887. Samford is home to the president's office. The Samford clock tower chimes every 15 minutes, and at noon, plays the fight song for all to hear. Other historical buildings located near Samford Hall include Langdon Hall and Hargis Hall. In front of Langdon you will see the University Seal, on which is written: "Research, Instruction, Extension; for the advancement of science and arts." These are the overarching principles to which Auburn was founded as Alabama's land-grant institution.

9. Mary Martin Hall

Mary Martin Hall was Auburn University's first library. It now houses Student Financial Services, Career Center and University Scholarships. The Career Center holds career and internship fairs yearly and conducts mock interviews and personality tests to help students find their career path. Next to Samford Hall, you see Ross Hall, which serves as the home to the Department of Chemical Engineering.

10. Ralph Brown Draughon Library and Mell Classroom

Ralph Brown Draughon Library is a 200,000-square-foot building and contains resources for students to utilize coursework, including the Media and Digital Resource Lab and Miller Writing Center. Several student support services are located here, including Study Partners – a student tutoring service and Academic Coaching. Located at the front entrance of RBD is the Mell Classroom Building, which includes interactive study, meeting and classroom spaces. Mell also houses Panera Bread to keep students fueled during late-night study sessions. Across College Street from the library is The Cambridge, a residence hall with rooms configured for double-occupancy and a dining facility on the first floor.

The College of Human Sciences is just to the right of the library in Spidle Hall. This college is home to degrees in hotel and restaurant management, human development and family studies as well as interior design and offers an international minor degree at Auburn's permanent international campus just outside of Rome, Italy.

11. Science Center Concourse

(Old Roosevelt Drive)

This area is informally known as the science center concourse because of its proximity to the College of Sciences and Mathematics. The large building is the Science Center Laboratories, and the two smaller buildings to the right are the Science Center Auditorium and the Science Center Classrooms. Beyond the Science Center and also up the hill, you will find Dudley Hall – home to the College of Architecture, Design and Construction. This nationally ranked college includes popular majors such as architecture, building science, graphic design, and landscape architecture.

12. Leach Science Center

The Leach Science Center addition, located above the hill of the COSAM buildings, houses classrooms and laboratories for science and math students.

13. Comer Hall

Comer Hall is home to the College of Agriculture, housing the college's main administrative offices as well as the Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology. Many pre-professional students choose the College of Agriculture's Pre-Vet/Pre-Professional track that allows students to satisfy academic requirements for application to Auburn's College of Veterinary Medicine. The College of Veterinary Medicine is accredited by the American Veterinary Medical Association Council of Education.

14. The Hill

The Hill houses men and women in 12 residence halls. Hill rooms are suite-style rooms consisting of two double-occupancy rooms connected by a bathroom. Terrell Dining Hall is centrally located on the Hill with four dining facilities. The Hill is the housing area closest to the Medical Clinic, which is a full-service primary-care clinic that serves Auburn students, faculty and staff as well as the community. The clinic includes a full medical staff, including physicians and nurse practitioners. Laboratory and X-ray rooms and other medical services are also provided. The School of Forestry and Wildlife Sciences is located just beyond the Hill. The school manages and maintains a Forest Ecology Preserve and Nature Center. The president's home is also located near the Hill and was built in 1938.

On Donahue Drive at the corner of West Samford is the South Donahue Residence Hall, which houses both athletes and undergraduates. The Wellness Kitchen across the street is a healthy eatery with options for gluten-free and allergy-free preparation stations.

15. The Village

The Village housing area consists of eight residence halls. Auburn's 17 social sororities are housed in three of the buildings and a fourth building houses members of the Honors College. The remaining four buildings are coed housing for both freshmen and upperclassmen.

The Village is located near the Auburn Arena, and has the capacity for 9,600 Auburn basketball fans. The Auburn University Recreation and Wellness Center is located directly across from the Arena. It provides more than 240,000 square feet of recreational space for Auburn students, faculty and staff. Amenities include an indoor walking/running track, six regulation-size basketball courts, an outdoor leisure pool, a rock climbing wall, racquetball courts, sand volleyball courts and much more. Located just beyond the recreation center are the intramural fields where students can play recreational sports.

16. Health Sciences Sector

The Health Sciences Sector includes the School of Nursing Building which provides hands-on learning space and classrooms for nursing students. Directly behind that building is the Pharmaceutical Research Building which houses pharmacy laboratory space and administrative offices.

1. The Quad Center

This is the center of the Upper Quad residence halls. Auburn has five residential neighborhoods: The Quad, The Hill, South Donahue, The Village and The Cambridge. The Quad is split into two areas - four halls in the upper quad and six in the lower quad. The Quad residences are designed as suite style (two double-occupancy rooms connected by a bathroom). All housing areas are equipped with air-conditioning and heating units. Basic cable and wireless Internet connection are included along with other utilities.

2. Student Center

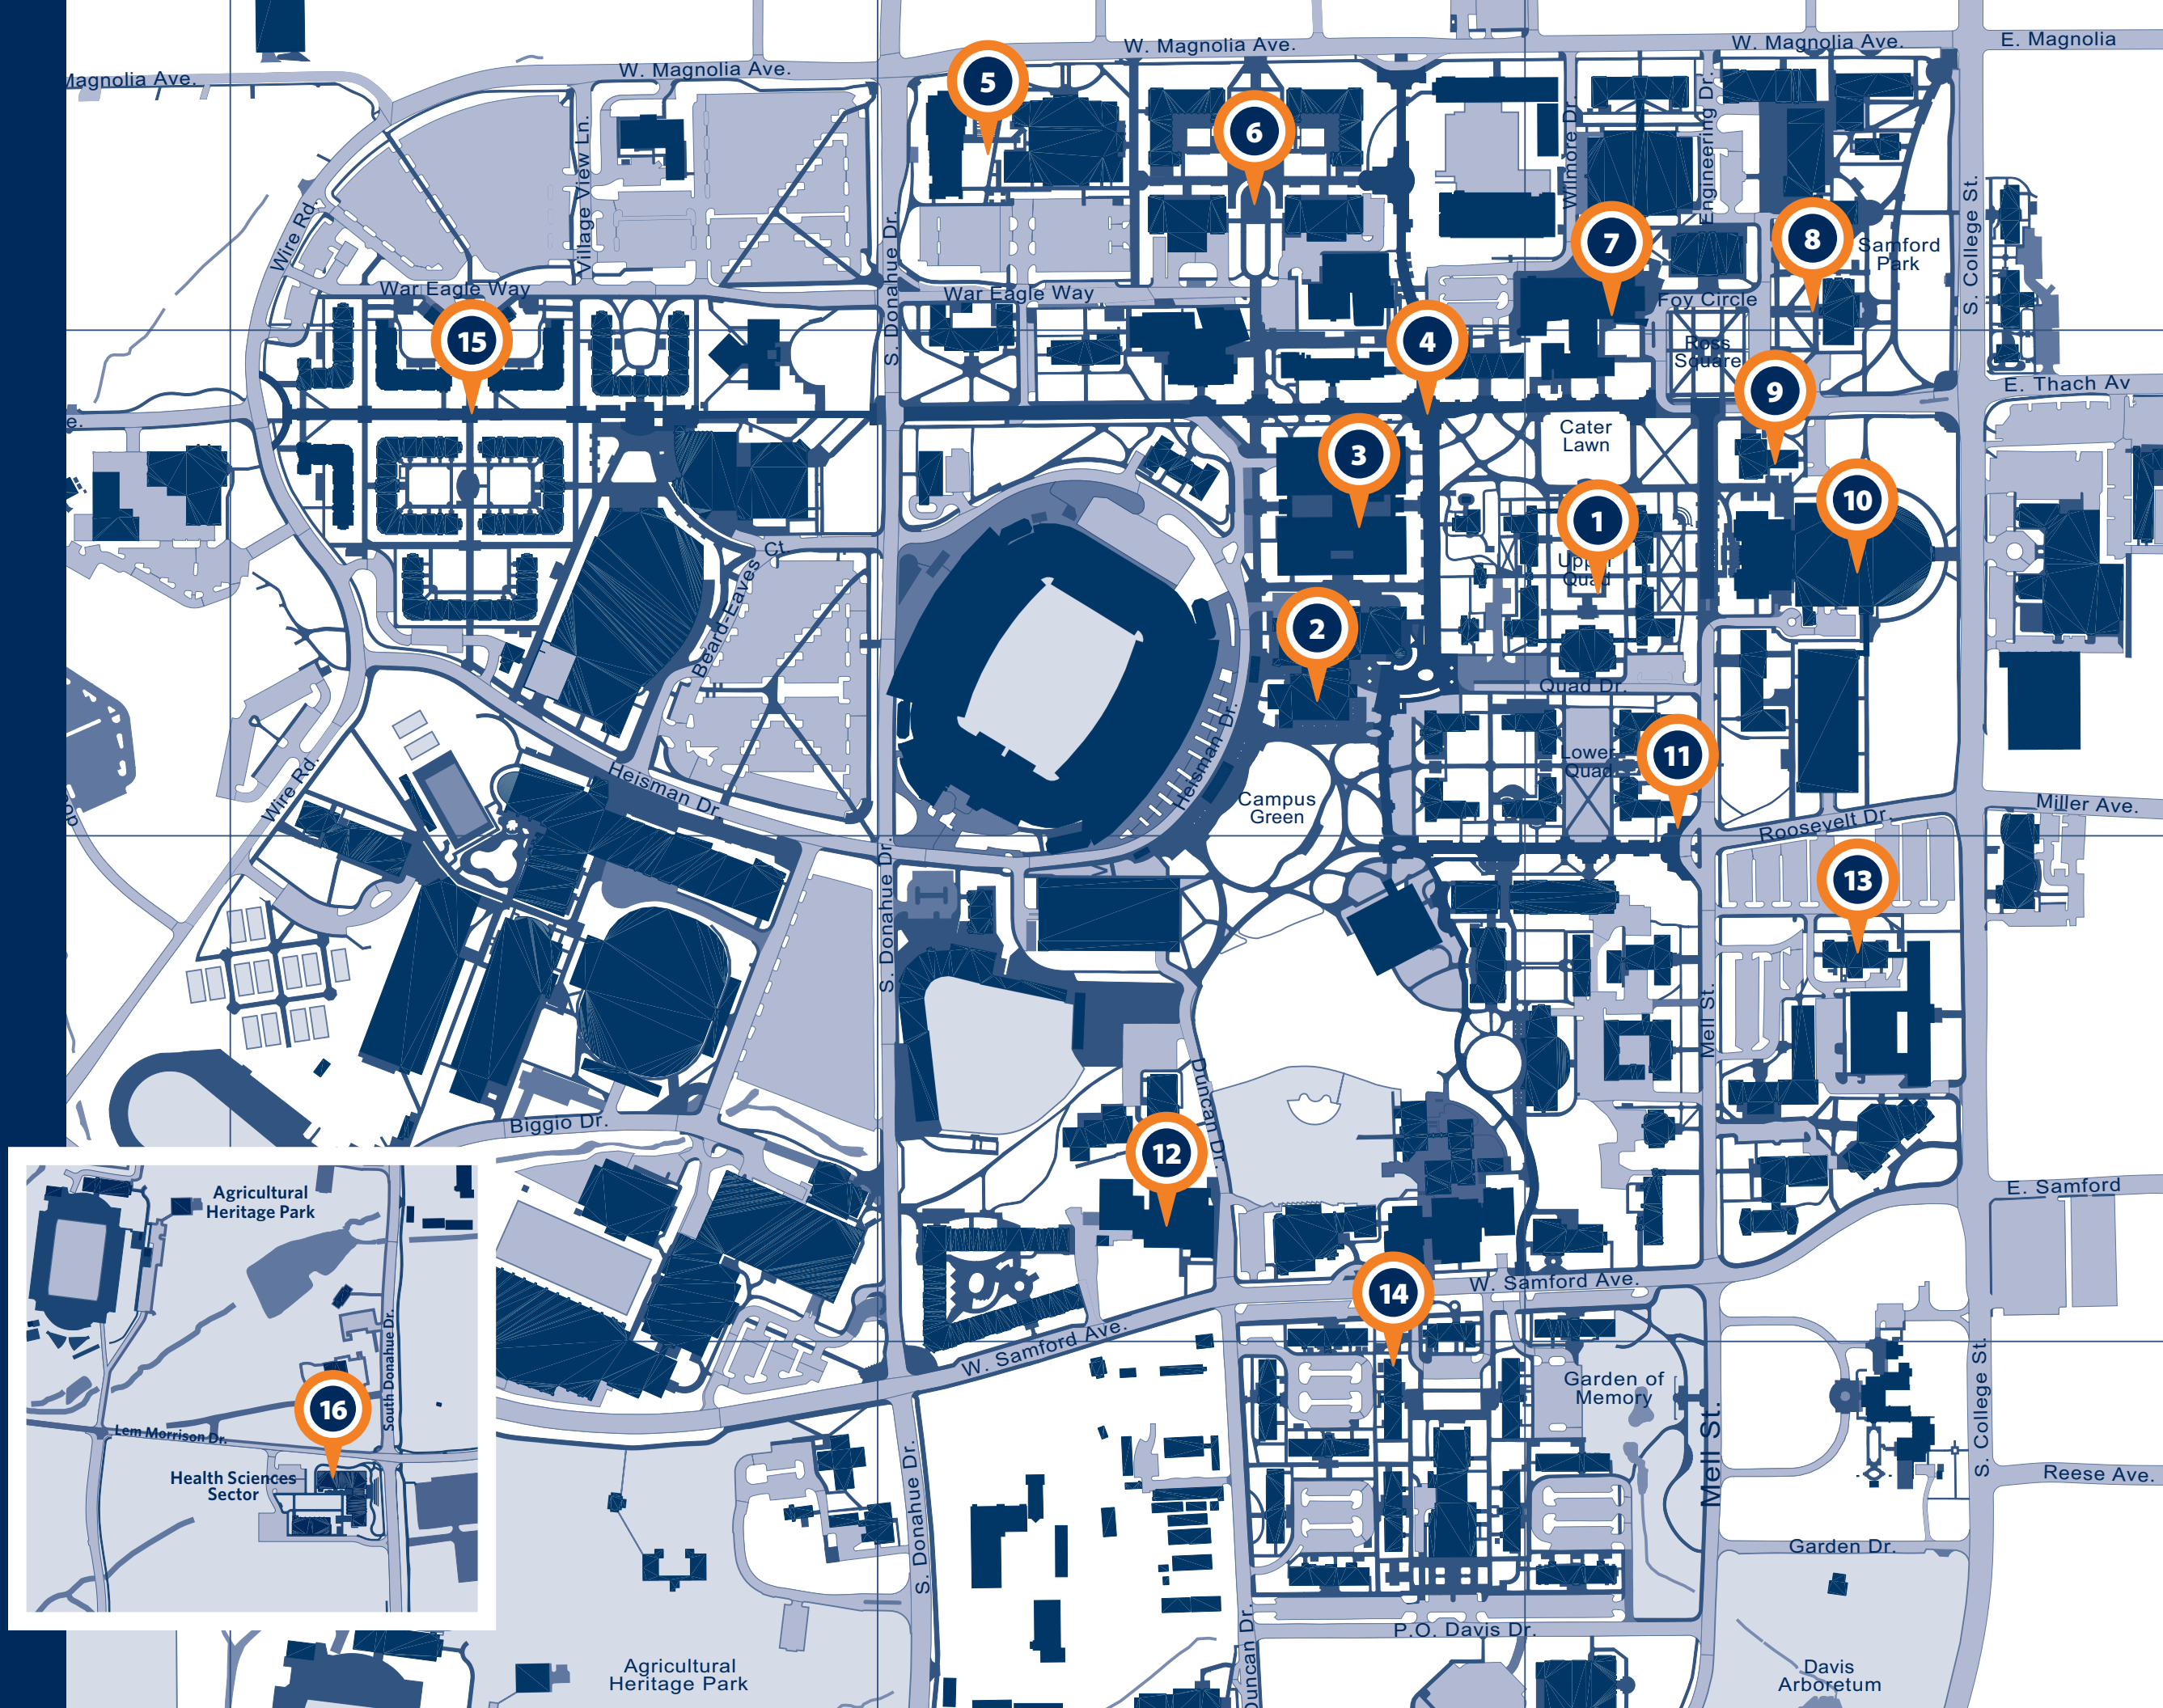

This is a gathering place for Auburn students. Auburn has more than 500 student organizations; many of their offices are housed here, as well as the student affairs personnel. There are seven dining options including, a full service Starbucks. The Foy Information Desk, just inside the entrance to the Student Center, was featured in Oprah's O Magazine and on the Today Show as one of the top 10 phone numbers to have in your cell phone. Beyond the Student Center is Jordan-Hare Stadium, which seats 87,451. On the west side of Jordan-Hare, you will find The Village residence halls, the Recreation and Wellness Center and the Auburn Arena, home to Tigers basketball.

3. Haley Center

Haley Center is home to the College of Education as well as classrooms for many of Auburn's freshman core classes. Classrooms are located on the first two floors while the tallest part of the building serves as faculty offices. The pedestrian area in front of Haley is commonly referred to as "the Concourse." Each fall, campus organizations will gather here to promote their group. O-Days, short for Organization Days, are a great way to see what all Auburn has to offer for student involvement. The University Bookstore is located on the first floor of Haley Center, where you should stop to pick up an Auburn souvenir.

4. Corner of Tiger Concourse and Thach Concourse

Across from Haley Center, you will see two buildings: Thach and Tichenor Halls. These are home to the College of Liberal Arts. To the left of Thach is Walker Hall, home to the Harrison School of Pharmacy,
