Job Function:	Communications Strategy

JOB SUMMARY

Reporting to the Executive Director of Public Affairs, the Director of Strategic Communications & Marketing focuses on creative strategy, content creation, and implementation and assessment of communication and marketing strategies. Collaborating with administrators and communicators across campus, the director works on the alignment, consistency, and integration of university messaging and communication and marketing products. Ensures the development of integrated campaigns that reflect Auburn's unique strengths in instruction, research and scholarship, and outreach/extension. Identifies and implements creative strategies that raise Auburn's national profile as a leading land-grant university.

RESPONSIBILITIES

- Prepares senior university leadership for public events.
- Participates and leads campus collaborative teams that identify, develop, implement, and manage integrated communication and marketing strategies that advance institutional goals and elevate Auburn's national visibility in compelling, creative and measurable ways.
- Contributes to development of institutional communication and marketing strategy as a member of the university's senior communications team.
- Works with central and campus communicators and key administrators to assess and prioritize marketing needs.
- Reviews and approves creative collateral and adjusts messaging and tactical execution as needed.
- Works with communications' staff to develop strategy for disseminating major university announcements, including the coordination of diverse communications plans.
- Represents, as needed, the executive director of public affairs in meetings, strategy sessions, and work groups.
- Performs other related duties as assigned by the Executive Director of Public Affairs.
